About this piece

A handwrought iron and copper fire screen aligned to the Arts and Crafts movement (1880 to 1910), c.1900. The riveted frame has arched side uprights, cross rails and small splayed feet. A shield-shaped copper panel sits to the centre with a hammered field and raised repousse bosses, finished with a looped top handle and neatly forged brackets. The honest construction and tactile surfaces are characteristic of late British workshop production.

Further images available on request. The piece is currently held in storage at one of our showrooms.
